Good afternoon Brad,

I do remember your visit to the University Archives last year. Congratulations on finishing the manuscript for your dissertation.

You may certainly use the image of the Macklin Bible in your dissertation. I only request that you designate that the item is from the Taylor University Archives.

Best of luck on your defense next week!

Ashley

Subject: Permission to Publish

Hi Ashley,

I don't know if you remember me. I visited the University Archives last May to look at Bibles in the James DeWeerd Collection. At the time, I was researching for my dissertation. Well, I have finally finished writing the manuscript. The finished manuscript includes one image from the Macklin Bible from the DeWeerd Collection (attached as it appears in the mss now).

When I visited the University Archives, I asked if I might have permission to use any of the photos or information I gleaned from my research. As I recall, you granted verbal permission to do so. However, I need that permission in writing before I proceed further with my dissertation process.

If you are willing to let me use this image, an email stating you have granted permission for me to use this image of the Macklin Bible in my dissertation is sufficient. If you wish to withhold permission, I will delete this image from my text.

The title of my dissertation is "The Tree for the Forest: Eco-Typology and the Tree of Life in John Milton's Paradise Lost." I will be defending my dissertation on Wednesday, April 10.

Thank you for your time and attention to my request.

Sincerely,
Brad Spaulding
