The Write Way

There no better feeling of euphoria to the human body then when you create something. The feeling you get when you've put all your hard work into one moment to create something special. What you create can be anything small or large just as long as it reminiscences in a moment of your past or creates a wrinkle in time for the future. I feel that best moment of creation that stirs of a whirlwind of feelings in the human mind and body is best conjured up simply every sit down to write.

As simple as the entire process of writing is, there a world of possibilities to come from it. By just dabbling on a piece of paper one can create worlds and worlds of simple go back to a joyous moment of their past. You don't even have to get fancy when you write. Writing a paper on what you ate for breakfast is just as much of a creation as a Tom Clancy novel.

I truly think this is the reason why we write; to create and explore. No one has invented a time-traveling deodorant...at least not yet, so until then we can create just as much gay as exploring the moments of your past with a pen and paper as we could with any technology. But we also write to create. To create something new that brings about that sense of pleasure. Whether it be exploring the confines of our past or create a new future, we have a gateway to accomplish the such through writing.

Without writing I think I wouldn't be able to remember some of the greatest and embarrassing moments of my life. I would never have been able to recall my feelings of shattered to Kent State University, and how I knew this was the perfect decision. I wouldn't be able to recollect on the moments of my youth that turned me into the man I am now. Finishing up this sentence, I also wouldn't be able to recall the time after days past my 21st birthday, I split a pitcher of beer all over the girl of my dreams.
Be it typify an essay on the War of 1812 or jot down details of a wild night at the bar with good bottles, wine boys is a feeling that we never will forget.
