In Their Place

Restrictions on women:

- State restricts women’s travel or mobility, or supports men’s authority to do so; typically women need permission of a male relative to travel or obtain a passport.
- State laws impose compulsory dress codes on women.
- State laws restrict both women’s travel and dress.
- Cultural norms, religious fundamentalism, or nationalist pressure are imposing increasing social restrictions on women.

State legislatures enacted 301 anti-abortion measures between 1995 and 2001; 87% of all U.S. counties are now not served by an abortion provider.

In Kyrgyzstan, family law prohibits divorce during pregnancy and while a child is younger than one year old.

Women in the Congo need the husband’s permission for most routine legal transactions, including accepting a job and opening a bank account.

Women in Saudi Arabia are not allowed to drive cars or ride bicycles.
Back to School:
Countries Where Fewer than 75% of Girls Start and Complete Primary Education (2005)

Some advancements have been made in the enrollment of girls in primary schools, but it is still the case that proportionally fewer girls are enrolled in school than boys. Girls are removed from school at an earlier age. Girls’ enrollment rates have actually declined in the past decade in several countries where war, economic hardship, and declining international donor assistance makes their education seem a luxury that cannot be afforded in hard times.

In several Sub-Saharan African countries, the average number of years of total schooling for girls remains below one full year.

Djibouti has the lowest percentage of girls enrolled in primary school—just 36%.
The Geography of Breast Cancer:
Countries with Incidences Greater than 50 per 100,000 Women (2002-2007)

- The U.S. has the highest rate of breast cancer with 101 cases per 100,000.
- The lowest rates of breast cancer are found in Asia, but even in regions with low incidence the rates are increasing rapidly.
- Women in industrialized countries are more likely to get breast cancer, but less likely to die from it than women in poor countries.
- In India, 861 women die each week of breast cancer.

A Vegas Wedding
Elvis eventually married Priscilla Beaulieu (who had been living at Graceland for nearly five years on March 3, 1967, above). They flew in from Palm Springs with another retinue of the usual Presley entourage. After an early morning wedding, at the Aladdin Hotel, Elvis and his wife returned to Palm Springs in the afternoon. The marriage lasted less than five years.

THE PATHS OF DESTRUCTION

Four passenger jets, taking off within 15 minutes of one another from three East Coast airports, were transformed by hijackers into fast-laden missiles. Two pierced the World Trade Center towers, minutes apart, causing their collapse. Another pierced the Pentagon; a fourth crashed near Pittsburgh.
