

Anders Winroth and "The Conversion of Scandinavia,"

a Deconstruction of the Traditional Narrative

An Honors Thesis (HONR499)

by

Aidan Feay

Thesis Advisor

Dr. Frederick Suppe

Ball State University

Muncie, Indiana

April 2016

Expected Date of Graduation

May 2016

SPColl
Undergrad
Thesis
LD
2489
.Z4
2016
.F42

Abstract

For hundreds of years, the Anglophone narrative of the Scandinavian conversion to Christianity has remained incredibly biased toward Western European actors by virtue of ignorance and a lack of archaeological evidence. Though the Scandinavian academic community has written extensively on the subject within the past two decades, very little of that work had been exposed to Anglophone academics. Just four years ago, Yale historian and native Swede Anders Winroth set out to fix this incredible discrepancy in his critically-acclaimed work, The Conversion of Scandinavia: Vikings, Merchants, and Missionaries in the Remaking of Northern Europe. This thesis will assess the prior historiography of the Scandinavian conversion, the individual arguments presented in Winroth's book, and its reception within the academic community.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Dr. Frederick Suppe for taking on the role of my advisor and being entirely instrumental in the outcome of this work.

I would like to thank Dean John Emert, Dean James Ruebel, and Sarah Haley, whose assistance throughout my career at Ball State allowed me to flourish.

I would like to thank my father for teaching me that history is more than just a massive timeline comprised of people and places.

I would like to thank Dr. Timothy Berg for encouraging my interest in art history and post-structuralist ideas.

Finally, I would like to thank Dr. Jason Powell for introducing me to the field of intellectual history and for showing me that, despite their reputation within the academic community, historians can still be cool.