Purpose of Thesis

This unit begins with a compilation of researched information dealing with Congress. This information is formatted into a language easily understood by high school students. Such topics covered in this unit are the election of representatives to Congress, the organization of Congress, the duties of a legislator, and the process by which legislation is enacted. The information is followed by several enrichment activities. Some of these activities are designed to help the students develop a better understanding of Congress and the before mentioned topics, while other activities require the students to employ higher level thinking skills to this basic information. Some of these activities include writing a bill and enacting a mock Senate to see whether or not the bill becomes a law, and writing an actual letter of concern to a local Congressman. I have included some actual samples of student work in this area.

These enrichment activities vary greatly in their degrees of difficulty. While this makes the unit more practical for future use, it also serves its purpose presently. I am student teaching this Spring semester of 1995 in a high school government class. I employed portions of this unit in one general class and one remedial class. This is the source of my student work.

My supervising teacher reported this area of study as a problem area for her remedial classes in the past. Therefore, I feel as if this unit was very beneficial for the students. I have evaluated my success with this remedial class, in particular, by discussing the effects of the use of my developed unit with my supervising teacher. She thought that the content was presented most definitely in a very thorough, yet creative way. I have also noticed the positive results of this unit when evaluating a pre-test and a post-test that I administered to the students. There were definite areas of improvement. Overall, I enjoyed developing this unit. However, I enjoyed teaching this unit even more. These remedial students really need the type of "hands-on" activities provided for in this unit. I am very happy that I could provide such a wide array of activities for these students in a most important subject that I believe is sometimes neglected.
Behavioral Objectives

After completing this unit students should be able to:

1. define basic vocabulary associated with Congress.

2. recall basic information about each legislative body of Congress dealing with such areas as size, qualifications, terms, elections, and the filling of vacancies.

3. compare and contrast the major differences between the House and the Senate.

4. explain how both Senators and Representatives are elected and the constituencies that they represent.

5. identify the powers granted to Congress by the Constitution of the United States of America.

6. identify the powers denied to Congress by the Constitution of the United States of America.

7. identify the power of Congress that would be used in order to deal with hypothetical situations Congress might face.

8. distinguish between expressed powers and implied powers granted to Congress.

9. analyze portions of the Constitution dealing with Congress in order to determine their relevance today.

10. explain the elastic clause and the effects it has on the powers of Congress.

11. explain the duties associated with Congressional leadership positions.

12. identify the names, political parties, and home states of current Congressional leaders.

13. explain how a state is divided into and represented by Congressional districts.

14. explain what gerrymandering is and how it is done.

15. identify the Congressional district in which he or she lives.

16. recall the names of the Senators from his or her state and the Representatives from his or her Congressional district.

17. construct Congressional districts based on a given map with hypothetical populations listed.
18. compare and contrast maps of various Congressional districts which have been affected by gerrymandering with those that have been apportioned fairly.

19. construct Congressional districts that are fair and equitable to all ethnic and racial groups based on a map supplying information in this area of ethnicity and race.

20. describe the various responsibilities of key committees in Congress.

21. analyze hypothetical situations confronted by Congress and decide which committee in Congress would handle the situation.

22. assign hypothetical bills to an appropriate House and Senate committee.

23. place the steps of the lawmaking process in correct chronological order.

24. analyze actual bills that originated in both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

25. evaluate the possible positive and negative effects of a controversial bill dealing with the protection of the United States flag.

26. explain what lobbying is.

27. evaluate the tactics employed by various lobbyists.

28. analyze a political cartoon dealing with the power of lobbyists.

29. evaluate the arguments for and against term limits for members of Congress.

30. analyze a political cartoon dealing with Congressional term limits.

31. explain the power of incumbency in Congress by analyzing bar graphs dealing with this subject.

32. describe the demographics of Congress in relationship to the demographics of the United States population by analyzing pie graphs dealing with this subject.

33. create a hypothetical appointment book for a legislator displaying various duties involved in a day in the life of a Congressional Representative.

34. describe the role of financing in Congressional elections.
35. evaluate the level of ethical standards applied to members of Congress.

36. explain how Congress must deal with the powers of the executive branch by analyzing a political cartoon dealing with this subject.

37. evaluate several various proposals dealing with Congressional reforms aimed at making Congress operate more efficiently.

38. evaluate a sample letter written to a Senator.

39. write an actual letter of concern to the appropriate Representative or Senator.

40. write a bill that addresses a particular area of concern to the student.

41. evaluate the bills of other class members by enacting the role of a member of a particular committee.

42. evaluate revised bills coming out of committee by contributing arguments and considering the arguments of others in a simulated Congressional debate.

43. display a basic knowledge of Congress by successfully participating in a game of Congressional Bingo.

Learn about the U.S. Government

The United States government has three branches:

- Legislative Branch: Lawmaking body (Congress: Senate and House of Representatives)
- Executive Branch: Administrative body (The President, Vice President, and Cabinet)
- Judicial Branch: Law-explaining body (The Supreme Court)

This unit we are about to study focuses on the legislative branch of our national government of the United States of America. These three branches of government work together and share the power necessary to govern the United States. This legislative branch is composed of our lawmaking body called Congress. The basic job of Congress is to make the laws that govern our nation. Article I of the Constitution created Congress with the words, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." The founders indicated the importance they placed on the lawmaking power by making the article on Congress the first one in the Constitution.

Today Congress still plays a vital role in formulating policies for our nation. After completing this unit, you will better understand how these policies are made by Congress. We will cover the following topics:

- the organization and leadership of Congress
- the powers of Congress
- the committee system of Congress
- how a bill becomes a law
- the life of a congressman
- influences on Congress
- how to influence Congress yourself

VOCABULARY ACTIVITIES

1. Students can complete the Congressional Crossword Puzzle found on the next page.

2. Students can create their own crossword puzzles using their vocabulary lists. They can then exchange their puzzles with a neighbor to be completed.

3. Students can write a few paragraphs describing what they have learned about Congress. They should be required to use at least 20 to 25 of the vocabulary words on the vocabulary lists provided.

4. Students can close their books and put away their vocabulary lists and list all of the new words that they can think of that are associated with Congress. After they have brainstormed enough to compile a pretty thorough list, they should then put the words into categories and come up with a label for each of these categories. This activity is ideal for small group work. The groups could then share their lists and add any other words or categories that other groups came up with.

5. Students can create an "All About Congress" book. Each student could be assigned either a topic relating to Congress or a letter of the alphabet that their word or topic must begin with. Then each student develops a page for the book. They can define their topic, give an example of it, and illustrate it through pictures.

Congress is a bicameral legislature. This means it is a legislature divided into two chambers or houses—the Senate and the House of Representatives. Although these houses have several differences between them, they do share some similarities. Most of these similarities occur when it comes to when Congress meets.

When Congress Meets:

Both the House of Representatives and the Senate meet for the same two-year term. Each term of Congress starts on January 3 of an odd numbered year. Therefore, the first Congress of the United States met in 1789. The term of the second Congress started two years later in 1791. Recently, the 104th Congress met in January of 1995.

Each term of Congress is divided into two regular sessions, or meetings. A session is one year long and includes breaks for holidays and vacations. Until about 1940, Congress would only stay in session for 4 or 5 months. Today, due to an increase in workload, a session of Congress often lasts from January until November or December.

Now let's take a look at the differences between the two houses.

1. SIZE

- Congress has a total of 535 members.
- The House of Representatives is the larger of the two houses.
- There are currently 435 members in the House of Representatives. The number of members, or seats, which a state is given is determined by its population. The larger a state's population the more seats it has in the House of Representatives. If a state's population increases or decreases, it will gain or lose seats. However, the Constitution guarantees every state at least one seat in the House. Today, six states have only one representative, while California has 45.
- The Senate is a much smaller house. There are two Senators from each state. Therefore, there are 100 Senators.
2. QUALIFICATIONS
- A Representative must be at least 25 years old. He or she must have been a United States citizen for at least 7 years. Also, the Representative must be a legal resident of the state from which he or she is elected.
- A Senator must be at least 30 years old. He or she must have been a United States citizen for at least nine years. The Senator must also be a legal resident of the state from which he or she is elected.

3. TERM
- Each Representative serves for a term—a period of 2 years. There is no limit to the number of terms a Representative may serve if he or she is reelected.
- Senators are elected for 6 year terms. The terms are staggered, however, so that one-third of the Senators are elected every two years. Because of the staggered terms, the Senate is sometimes referred to as a continuous body.

4. ELECTION
- Elections for members of the House are held on the Tuesday following the first Monday in November of every even-numbered year. A member's term begins on January 3 following the November election.
- Before 1913, Senators were chosen by the state legislatures. In 1913, the 17th Amendment to the Constitution was adopted. This amendment states that all Senators are to be elected by the voters in statewide elections. Senatorial elections occur in November of even-numbered years. Only one Senator is elected from a state at any one election, unless the other Senator has resigned, died or been expelled. Senators are sworn into office when Congress meets in January following the November election.

4. VACANCIES
- If a Representative dies, resigns, or is expelled from the House before his or her 2 year term is over, the governor of the state must call a special election to fill the vacancy or empty seat in the House.
- If the same situation occurs in the Senate, the governor of the state can do one of two things. The governor can either call a special election to fill the vacancy or make a temporary appointment until the next election. (In 1989, the governor of Indiana appointed Dan Coats to complete the term of Senator Dan Quayle, who became Vice-President of the nation.)

WHAT CAN CONGRESS DO?

The Constitution gives Congress its powers. Here is a list of what Congress CAN do...

1. set federal taxes

2. spend money for the country's defense and for the general welfare of the people

3. borrow money and pay the federal government's debts

4. make laws about trade

5. make laws about how a person may become a citizen of the United States

6. make laws about bankruptcy

7. print or coin money and say how much it is worth

8. set up standards for weighing and measuring

9. make laws to punish counterfeiters

10. set up post offices

11. have roads built

12. give people patents and copyrights

13. set up courts that are lower than the Supreme Court

14. make laws to punish crimes committed on U.S. ships on the high seas and crimes against international law

15. declare war

16. organize the armed forces, make rules for them, and pay them

17. make laws to help set up the state militia, or National Guard and can call on the militia to enforce the country's laws

18. make laws for the District of Columbia

19. admit new states to the union

20. make all laws that are "necessary and proper" to carry out the powers listed above

The powers mentioned in numbers 1 through 19 are called expressed powers because they are written out in the Constitution. Other powers that come out of this "necessary and proper" clause or the elastic clause are called implied powers.
WHAT CAN'T CONGRESS DO?

There are also certain powers that Congress cannot perform. These powers include the following...

1. Except in times of rebellion or invasion, Congress cannot take away from a person in prison the right to demand a writ of habeas corpus. This is a court order that requires a prisoner to be brought before a court. The court then decides if there are grounds for continuing to hold the prisoner for trial.

2. Congress cannot pass bills of attainder. These are laws that punish people for crimes without first giving them a trial.

3. Congress cannot pass ex post facto laws. These are laws that punish people for doing something that was not against the law when the person did it.

4. Congress cannot tax exports, or goods, that are shipped out of the country.

5. Congress cannot make laws about trade that favor one state over another.

6. Congress cannot take any money from the federal treasury without passing a law to do so.

7. Congress cannot give anyone a title of nobility, such as king, queen, lord, noble, prince, or princess.

8. Congress cannot make any law that violates the Bill of Rights or any other part of the Constitution.

9. Congress cannot pass laws on matters not covered by the Constitution. The Constitution states that if power is not granted to the United States, it is reserved for the states or for the people.
THE CONSTITUTION AND CONGRESSIONAL POWERS

In order to complete this activity you will need a copy of the Constitution of the United States of America. This document can be found in the back of your textbook.

1. Find Article I. Section 1 of this article grants all legislative powers to Congress. Why do you think that the founders of our nation placed this section first?

2. Which section lists the expressed powers of Congress?

3. Notice the last statement in this section which gives Congress the power to make laws that are "necessary and proper". This gives Congress its implied powers. Why do you think that this clause is commonly referred to as the "elastic clause"?

4. Which section lists the powers denied to Congress?

5. List some powers that you think the founders should have included in the expressed powers list that they did not include.

6. List some powers that you think the founders should not have included in the expressed powers list that they did include.

7. Do you think that the elastic clause is sometimes abused by Congress? If so, how?

8. Even though this Constitution was written over 200 years ago, do you think that it still accurately describes the role the legislative branch should play in our national government? Explain your answer.
Congressional Powers

The Constitution gives Congress certain powers.

Directions: The left-hand column lists some of the powers that the Constitution gives Congress. The right-hand column lists some situations in which Congress could exercise its powers. Constitutional Amendments

The Constitution describes Congress.

Directions: Read the following constitutional passages that describe Congress. Then read the Thirteenth through the Twentieth Amendments in Chapter 1 of your textbook. In the spaces provided below, write the number of the amendment or amendments that changed the passage and explain the change.

1. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

2. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each state, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each senator shall have one vote.

3. The seats of the senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

4. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.
ANSWERS

1. The Thirteenth Amendment eliminated slavery in the United States or in any lands under its control. No one may be forced to work unless a court has set that as punishment for committing a crime. The Fourteenth Amendment canceled the three-fifths clause.

2. The Seventeeth Amendment changed the method of selecting senators to election by the people of each state, not by the state legislatures.

3. The Seventeenth Amendment provided that "when vacancies happen in the representation of any state in the Senate, the executive authority of such state shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies..."

4. The Twentieth Amendment set January 3 as the regular meeting date.
Stretching the Constitution

The elastic clause is the basis of the implied powers.

Directions: Listed below are the definitions of 12 terms relating to the informal powers of Congress. Place each term defined in the appropriate spaces in the puzzle that follows.

1. one of the parties in the suit challenging the constitutionality of a national bank
2. word in Article 1, Section 8, Clause 18 emphasized by broad constructionists
3. leader of the Democratic-Republicans who favored strict construction
4. word in Article 1, Section 8, Clause 18 emphasized by strict constructionists
5. the clause in the Constitution that has allowed Congress to "stretch" its powers.
6. the opposite of rigidity; one of the characteristics of the American political system
7. one of the implied powers of Congress that led to disclosures about Watergate
8. the court that determines whether an act of Congress is constitutional
9. powers on which implied powers are based

The Battle over the Bank

The elastic clause is the basis of the implied powers.

Directions: In the battle over the establishment of a national bank, President George Washington asked his Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson and his Secretary of the Treasury Alexander Hamilton to submit their views on the plan. Jefferson gave a strict constructionist view, and Hamilton gave a broad constructionist view. The opinions of both men played an important role in defining the elastic clause as the basis of the implied powers of Congress. Read the following excerpts from the two opinions. On the line after the excerpts, identify the point of view as strict or broad. Then identify the author of the opinion as Jefferson or Hamilton.

. . . Necessary often means no more than needful, requisite, incidental, useful, or conducive to . . . And it is the true one in which it is to be understood as used in the Constitution. The whole turn of the clause containing it [the elastic clause] indicates, that it was the intent of the Convention, by that clause, to give a liberal attitude to the exercise of the specified powers.

. . . The powers contained in a constitution of government, especially those which concern the general administration of the affairs of a country, its finances, trade, defense etc., ought to be construed liberally in advancement of the public good . . .

A hope is entertained that it has, by this time, been made to appear, to the satisfaction of the President, that . . . the bill under consideration . . . brings the case within the provision of the clause of the Constitution . . .

1. I consider the foundation of the Constitution as laid on this ground—that all powers not delegated to the United States, by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states, or to the people (10th amend): To take a single step beyond the boundaries thus specifically drawn around the powers of Congress, is to take possession of a boundless field of power, no longer susceptible of any definition.

The incorporation of a bank, and the powers assumed by this bill, have not, in my opinion, been delegated to the United States by the Constitution.

. . . The Constitution allows only the means which are 'necessary', not those which are merely 'convenient', for effecting the enumerated powers. If such a latitude of construction be allowed to this phrase as to give any non-enumerated power, it will go to every one; for there is no one which ingenuity may not torture into a convenience, in some way or other . . .

Can it be thought that the Constitution intended that, for a shade or two of convenience, more or less, Congress should be authorized to break down the most ancient and fundamental laws of the several states[?] . . .

the court ruled the Constitution clearly intended that a vote in one congressional district was to be worth as much as a vote in another district. This principle has come to be known as the "one person, one vote" rule. This rule requires all congressional districts to be nearly equal in population. As a result, today each congressional district contains about 5000,000 people. These people in a congressional district that a member of the House is representing are called constituents.

DISTRICTING BY GERRYMANDERING

The second way legislatures have abused their power to divide the state into congressional districts is by gerrymandering. Gerrymandering means that the political party which has the majority in a state legislature draws a district's boundaries so as to gain an advantage in elections. Gerrymandering often results in very irregularly shaped election districts. Gerrymandering takes its name from Elbridge Gerry, an early governor of Massachusetts, who was one of the first to engage in the practice. A cartoonist, seeing a map of the oddly shaped new districts, drew a cartoon of them in the shape of a salamander, which was renamed a "gerrymander" by his editor.

There are basically two ways to gerrymander. They are called "packing" and "cracking" by politicians. "Packing" a district means drawing the lines of a congressional district so they include as many of your political party's voters as possible. The idea is to make the district "safe" for the election of your party's candidate. "Cracking" means dividing the opponent's strength among two or more districts. This makes it difficult for your opponent to get enough votes to win election.

Gerrymandering continues as a practice in American politics today but with much reduced frequency. The Supreme Court has ruled that congressional districts must be "compact" and "contiguous"—that is, physically adjoining. This requirement, plus the one person-one vote ruling, has cut down on the worst examples of gerrymandering.

funding for many federal aid programs. Democrats, especially those representing inner-city districts where the undercount is comparatively high, have long argued for a statistical adjustment to compensate for undercounting. Several cities with large minority populations sought but failed to win adjustment of the 1980 census count.

Given the disappointing response to the census questionnaire and other problems encountered in conducting the 1990 census, many observers estimated that the undercount would be higher than the 1980 undercount. But the controversy over the 1990 count began even before the census was taken, when the Commerce Department, the parent agency to the Census Bureau, announced in 1987 that it would not statistically adjust the 1990 data. That fueled charges that the Republican administration was undercounting a Democratic constituency. New York City, along with other cities, states, and civil rights organizations, quickly brought a lawsuit to force the Census Bureau to make a statistical adjustment to account for people who were missed. But in April 1993 a federal judge in New York upheld the Commerce Department's decision not to adjust the head count. (Census count, box, page 15)

REDISTRICTING: DRAWING THE LINES

Although the Constitution contained provisions for the apportionment of U.S. House seats among the states, it was silent about how the members should be elected. From the beginning most states divided their territory into geographic districts, permitting only one member of Congress to be elected from each district.

But some states allowed would-be House members to run at large, with voters able to cast as many votes as there were seats to be filled. Still other states created what were known as multimember districts, in which a single geographic unit would elect two or more members of the House. At various times, some states used combinations of these methods. For example, a state might elect 10 representatives from 10 individual districts and two at large.

In the first few elections to the House, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Georgia elected their representatives at large, as did Rhode Island and Delaware, the two states with only a single representative. Districts were used in Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Virginia and South Carolina. In Connecticut a preliminary election was held to nominate three times as many people as the number of representatives to be chosen at large in the subsequent election. In 1840 22 of the 31 states elected their representatives by districts. New Hampshire, New Jersey, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Missouri, with a combined representation of 33 House seats, elected their representatives at large. Three states, Arkansas, Delaware, and Florida, had only one representative each.

Those states that used congressional districts quickly developed what came to be known as the gerrymander. The term refers to the practice of drawing district lines so as to maximize the advantage of a political party or interest group. The name originated from a salamander-shaped congressional district created by the Massachusetts Legislature in 1812 when Elbridge Gerry was governor.
2nd District

East Central — Muncie; Anderson; Columbus

Although manufacturing is a major factor in the medium-size cities across east-central Indiana, the 2nd’s Democratic vote is outweighed by a GOP tradition in presidential elections. George Bush won easily here in 1988, and in 1992 he outdistanced Bill Clinton by almost 20,000 votes districtwide.

Yet a series of industrial recessions and the financial uncertainties of family farmers have made the district’s mainly conservative electorate more receptive to Democrats at other levels. Democratic Gov. Evan Bayh swept the district in his 1992 re-election victory. The incumbent House Democrat, first elected in 1974, won comfortably in 1992.

Unemployment throughout the 2nd is well below the near-depression levels of the early 1980s, when local auto-related industries laid off thousands. However, the long-term downsizing of the blue-collar work force has taken its toll: 1990 population in Delaware County (Muncie) was down more than 7 percent from 1980, and Madison County (Anderson) was down nearly that much. Rural areas such as Randolph and Henry counties also saw their economies and populations slip.

In the 1920s, Muncie was the model for "Midtown," a study of small-town American life. Today, with about 71,000 residents, it is the largest city in the 2nd. Muncie’s biggest private employer is Borg-Warner Automotive, which makes transmissions. The city’s economy also benefits from Ball State University, which has 20,300 students and employs more than 6,100 people, and from the Ball Corp. It was founded and has its headquarters in Muncie, although most of its glass canning jars are made elsewhere.

Anderson’s economy is heavily reliant on auto components manufacturing; the city is still trying to recover from layoffs and downsizing in that sector during the 1980s. Its largest employers are affiliates of General Motors: The Delco Remy division makes car ignition systems and electrical components; Inland Fisher Guide makes lighting equipment and bumpers. Officials in both Anderson and Muncie are working to use their locations on the White River for economic development and recreational purposes.

Although Columbus (Bartholomew County) has a strong industrial base—it is home to the Cummins Engine Co. and Arvin Industries—many of the voters are conservative: Bush took Bartholomew with 48 percent of the vote in 1992. Columbus boasts an array of modern buildings designed by leading architects; a local foundation helped fund the designs. Richmond (Wayne County), which Quakers founded in the 19th century, has an opera company.

The land outside the cities is rural and heavily farmed. Soybeans, oats and wheat are major crops in the northern part of the 2nd.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS

Every state is assigned Representatives to the House of Representatives according to its population. Every ten years, a national census, or population count, takes place throughout the nation. The first census was taken in 1790 and the latest in 1990. Once the population of each state is determined by the census, the number of Representatives to which each state is entitled is set, based on the population. This process is called apportionment. Thus, every ten years, after the census is taken, Congress fulfills its constitutional responsibility to determine how the seats in the House are to be divided. However, it is actually the Census Bureau that figures out how many Representatives each state is entitled to. States whose population decreases or increases less rapidly than others may lose Representatives, while states whose population grows at a rapid rate may be entitled to more Representatives.

Over the years, as the population and size of the nation grew, the membership of the House of Representatives increased. In 1790, the House had 65 members. By 1810, the number had more than doubled to 186. Throughout the 19th century, more and more Representatives swelled the House ranks. In 1912, the number of Representatives reached 435. Many Americans became concerned over the increasing size of the House. They feared that adding more and more members eventually would make the House so large that it would not be able to carry out its work. Consequently, in 1929 a law was passed stabilizing the membership of the House at 435 Representatives.

Each state sets up congressional districts—one district for each Representative. Representatives are elected from congressional districts. If a state like Wyoming is entitled to only one representative, then it has only one congressional district. California, by contrast, has 45 congressional districts and 45 Representatives. The state legislature draws the boundary lines for congressional election districts and decides how large these districts will be. The process of setting up new district lines after a census is known as redistricting.

Over the years, however, some state legislatures have abused the redistricting power. They have done so in two ways. First, they created congressional districts of very unequal population. During the early 1960's, for example, some districts in Michigan, near Detroit, had over 600,000 people, while other Michigan districts had fewer than 200,000 people. During the same period, there were 21 states in which the largest district had twice the population of the smaller district. In effect, this meant that in these states a person's vote in the largest congressional districts had only half the value of a person's vote in the smaller districts.

In a series of decisions during the 1960's, the Supreme Court ended these practices. In the landmark case of Baker v. Carr (1962), the court held that federal courts could decide conflicts over the drawing of district boundaries by state legislatures. Two years later, in Wesberry v. Sanders (1964),
