

Jake Felton

What is your Secret Power?

When I first discovered I was Superhuman, I considered contact people with a similar struggle like Tom Cruise or Oprah Winfrey. I decided against these urges, and instead conformed to the idea of overcoming my struggle through my own willpower.

I remember the night I told my family with such clarity that I still cringe with embarrassment. My family and I still communicate, but I haven't made eye contact with them since.

Social norms and comic book lore dictate that once a super freak recognizes his/her potential, that they should become a figure head and a savior for their fellow citizen. Holding up a firm palm to these ideas, I declaratively, yet somehow self-consciously said "No". I would become who I wanted to become.

~~Fighting crime never was~~

A pacifist by nature it seemed a little odd how I adapted to crime fighting so quickly. Fighting only for myself when I realized my power made it easier. I ~~had~~ wielded a power so fierce, it often made my opponents claw out their eyes and ears. So silent I had become, I could startle a mouse. Overwhelmingly controversial, old ladies fainted in my presents. I stalk the nights when the moon is high. I am the midnight streaker!