Abstract

Critical care is put in the last semester of the Ball State Nursing Program for a reason; it truly is a fast-paced, challenging culmination of everything one learns in nursing school. The analysis of eight patients in a critical care setting shows the growth and advancement in knowledge that comes with challenging patient care assignments. It is through actual patient care that nurses grow the most. The following eight patients demonstrate the level of critical thinking and nursing care management appropriate for a final semester nursing student.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank Mahnaz Mahmoodi for her help and support as I learned to navigate and explore the world of critical and find my passion.

I would also like to thank Ball Memorial Hospital and all the staff on the critical care units for welcoming us with open arms and allowing us to learn.
