Abstract

Throughout modern history, the identities and experiences of queer individuals have been invalidated and erased by those in power for a variety of reasons. Religious ideology and a lack of understanding of the queer experience often stripped the words from those who were left without a voice – the gay men and women of the mid-1900s, the transgender and non-binary members of the queer community, of whom the ability to use public restrooms and serve in the American military is still up for public debate, and those without such clear cut identities who have yet to find words for who they are.

All of this is to say that the non-fictional stories of the queer community are often traumatic and painful. But, fortunately, that does not mean that members of the queer community do not have captivating stories to tell – be they non-fiction or fiction. QUEERLY SAID is an online literary journal where queer writers are allowed to express themselves and write in worlds colored by their own experiences. It is a home for fictional and non-fictional stories to be written by those previously voiceless and read by those who want to immerse themselves in fantastic, exciting stories that have themes that they can identify with. The site was built as a hub for the issues that would be published containing the words of those writers and the marketing plan was created to spread the word of QUEERLY SAID and invite as many interested parties as possible to share in the common cultural experience of storytelling.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank Kim Lauffer for being my advisor throughout this process. She taught me so much valuable knowledge about coding, site building, and design and I will continue to build upon that knowledge for the rest of my life as technology continues to grow. She also supported my dream of creating QUEERLY SAID and offered sound advice at every turn I stumbled upon.

I would also like to thank Jackie and Marianne. Without Jackie, my design work would have been an absolute disaster and her ideas are what brought my logo and final site design to life. She also supplied the art used for the mock-ups and the live site, and I appreciate her more than she may know. Marianne was behind me the entire way and supported even the worst of my mistakes. She was my first proof reader and the first person I showed every piece of this project to. Thank you both, without either of you QUEERLY SAID would not have been what it became.
