Abstract

Loneliness presents itself in a wide array of situations, even in moments surrounded by many others. This series of poems explores these situations (and others where I felt small), touching on moments in groups, with another person, and completely alone. These poems, consisting of both traditional form and free verse, are expanded by supplementary videos and songs to expand on the aesthetic of the collection. By mixing together these different mediums, the traditional use of image in poetry is challenged and reinforced while still placing the main emphasis on the poetry altogether. Through this series, I hope to illicit an understanding of oneself and the world while giving them direct glimpses into these portrayals.
